

The Cat and the Rats

1Y (19) Lau Cheuk Yin Topco

Once upon a time, a cat lived in a house with a very bad owner. The owner seldom fed the cat. In the house, there were three rats hiding from the owner. The cat and the three rats were best friends.

One day, the cat was starving. The cat asked the three rats to help him get some food. The rats wanted food too, but they were not as hungry as the cat. The rats said to the cat, "If the owner finds out, he might punish you!" The cat replied, "Well then let's get some food, leave the house and find a new home!" They decided to do it.

The rats came out of their hole sneakily while the cat opened the fridge. When the cat opened the fridge, the rats used their teeth to nibble open the bags with food in it. The cat used its mouth to take all the food. But then, the owner came back from work!

The owner was furious when he saw the cat and the rats stealing his food. When the owner was about to hit the cat, the rats went to the owner's feet and bit his foot! The owner was enraged at the cat and the rats. He tried to step on the rats! The cat quickly bit and scratched the owner and then carried the rats to the outside world.

When an old lady saw the poor cat and rats running in the street, she took them home. She fed and petted the cat regularly and treated the cat well. In addition, not only was she not terrified of the rats, but she also gave them food regularly.

The cat and rats realised that helping each other back then was a very good decision. They lived happily in their new home for the rest of their lives.

The moral of the story is "A friend in need is a friend indeed".